Reports on the activities of Bolivian Movimiento Nacionalista Revolucionario (INRR) exiles in Chile have furnished the following information:

1. Eduardo Copaja Gassols is now living in Iquique, Chile, where he is employed as a swimming instructor. Information available in Arica reveals that Copaja, while in that city, was involved in several questionable business maneuvers, and decided to move to Iquique to escape criminal prosecution. He attempted to become an informant of Chilean Investigaciones and offered to supply important information concerning Bolivian activities. However, Investigaciones authorities turned down his offer because of his poor reputation for reliability and integrity. There are no indications that Copaja intends to return to Bolivia, and, according to information obtained in Arica, if he did, he would face arrest because of a record of petty crimes in La Paz. Copaja claims to have two brothers living in La Paz with important posts in the present Bolivian government.
2. Carlos Daza Lavandez and Humberto del Villar Aguilera remained in Arica, where their only activities consisted in questioning travellers arriving from Bolivia concerning the political situation there.
